Attorney Charles Bowen Honored by Georgia Senate Resolution and Outstanding Georgia Citizen Award

A resolution passed by the Georgia State Senate has recognized Savannah attorney Charles "Bo" Bowen for his services to both the state's entertainment industry and to its legal profession. In addition, Georgia Secretary of State Brad Raffensperger honored Bowen as an "Outstanding Georgia Citizen."

The Senate resolution was sponsored by State Sens. Lester Jackson (D-Savannah) and Ben Watson (R-Savannah) and praises Bowen's role in promoting Savannah's growing movie and television industry. The resolution cites, in part, the reasons for the recognition: "Bo founded the Savannah Film Alliance in 2015 to foster cooperation and collaboration within the local entertainment industry; he is also the founder and president of Southern Gateway Production Services, which provides support to all out-of-town productions coming to the region; and he is the co-founder of Aeroscope Studios, the author of three eBooks on business and entertainment law, and currently serves on numerous corporate boards and councils."

The resolution also recaps business honors Bowen has received. They include being named "Business Advocate of the Year" by the Savannah Morning News, winning the "Helen V. Head Business Leader of the Year Award" from the Savannah Area Chamber of Commerce and receiving additional accolades from the legal profession.

The full text of the resolution can be found here: http://www.legis.ga.gov/Legislation/20192020/183638.pdf. Bowen first met with Gov. Brian Kemp before heading to the Senate floor. Sen. Jackson then read the resolution aloud and invited Bowen to address the Senate. He was then named an Outstanding Georgia Citizen by the Georgia Secretary of State.

The recognition from the Secretary of State reads: "May this Outstanding Citizen be afforded every courtesy as a Goodwill Ambassador from Georgia in his travels to other states, to nations beyond the borders of the United States of America, or wherever he may hereafter travel or reside. Thank you for your service to our State."

Bowen's two daughters accompanied him to the Georgia State Capitol. In his remarks before the Senate, Bowen stated: "I am deeply honored, and I am very grateful that my two teenage daughters could be here today to see firsthand that working hard in your profession and trying to help others succeed does not go unnoticed. I know that is a lesson they will carry with them into adulthood. I also want to thank all of you, the leaders of the State of Georgia, for the tremendous work you have done in promoting the entertainment industry and helping ensure every year that Georgia remains the greatest place in the world to conduct business."

COMPETITION CORNER

by Charles M. Dalziel, Jr., Dalziel Law Firm, Atlanta GA

We celebrate spring and the birth of Dalziel Law Firm today by discussing the relevance of FDIC v. Loudermilk, (March 13, 2019, Supreme Court of Georgia, Warren, J.) to (unfair) competition, employee restrictive covenant and trade secrets cases. You'll remember that this is the case where the Supreme Court held unanimously that the principles of apportionment codified in OCGA 51-12-33 apply to tort claims for purely pecuniary losses—rejecting the argument that the apportionment statute applicable to actions for injury to property is limited to actions for injury to tangible property. Also, where concerted action is present, joint and several liability continues to apply despite the enactment of the apportionment statute.

The former emphasis on "indivisible injury" for joint and several liability has been supplanted by OCGA 51-12-33, and the correct touchstone for apportionment now is the percentage of fault attributed to each defendant. The key determinations are can fault be divided, and if so what percentage of fault is assigned to each party and possibly third parties. In cases of concerted action, the fault cannot be divided legally. While we all know the law that conspiracy is not a separate tort, the Court's opinion suggests the plaintiff in competition cases should plead it to cement the case of concerted action—if the plaintiff wants joint and several liability. The hot phrase for conspiracy is "common design"—the defendants acting independently, but in furtherance of their common design. In the case of actions by common design, fault is indivisible and apportionment does not apply.

So, covenant/ trade secret enforcers, you should beef up allegations of concerted action by the defecting employee/recruit, the recruiting principal of the new employer, the new employer's marketing, HR, and legal departments, etc. to construct the full picture of the plan to skirt/breach/ignore the covenant and for the new employee to deliver his former employer's confidential information and trade secrets. This is a huge barrier to the new employer's effort to distance itself from the recruit, which we often see when the employer and the employee have separate counsel.

And, employee defense lawyers, the opinion contains about ten pages wrestling with statutory construction. The effect of a statute is directly influenced by pre-amendment common law. The Court is reluctant to abrogate the common law and construes the law in accordance with the constitutional, statutory and common law history/context surrounding the statute and its structure. Therefore, defense lawyers, note OCGA 13-8-50 et seq. is titled "Restrictive Covenants in Contracts." 13-8-53(a) specifically refers to "enforcement of contracts." Yet, wanting to avoid the argument that the employee is not an employee at will, several of the documents I've recently litigated about contained specific announcements that they were not contracts. Therefore, the permission 13-8-53 gives employers does not reach these freestanding covenants. The statute requires the covenants to be in contracts, and they are not.
